General Motors' Marketplace tracks drivers' buying preferences

If you love American food, preferably burgers, you probably drive a General Motors vehicle.

In beta testing, that's the top food preference many GM drivers using Yelp Reservations searched for on newer model GM vehicles. Their second favorite cuisine is Asian/vegetarian followed by Mexican, GM said. If a GM driver orders takeout, it's typically on a Wednesday, GM said.

GM knows all of this and more about the buying habits of some of its drivers because it tracks trends through the Marketplace app that's on nearly 4 million GM vehicles.

It's not the first time GM has monitored customers' idiosyncrasies — with their permission, of course — to learn purchasing patterns and share it with advertisers. Late last year, GM did a study using vehicle Wi-Fi to track drivers' radio listening habits.

Marketplace is on most GM 2017-19 model vehicles. It allows drivers to buy coffee, doughnuts, make restaurant and hotel reservations and even prepay for gasoline, all from the road using a dashboard touch screen. GM is adding Yelp Reservations now, initially to most Buick vehicles, to let drivers search for restaurants in a 25-mile radius of their vehicles' location and reserve a table for up to 10 people.

And it gives GM lots of information about what its drivers like to buy.
